breach of promise has recently been at-tracting attention in Baltimore county. Md., the importance of the case being enhanced by the fact that it is the first and only case of a similar character that has ever been tried there. The suit was instituted by Mrs. Elizabeth Halbert, aged fifty-five and quite gray-haired, against Isaiah Baker, aged seventy-four. Elizabeth declares that in December last Elizabeth declares that in December last Isaiah promised to marry her on the last day of January following, but failed to do so. Elizabeth swore that Baker visited her very often and proposed marriage by declaring that his home was so lonely that he did not like to go there. He kept on proposing until she accepted him, and though he was old in years, he was yery fond of making love, and was as good at caressing as any young man she ever saw. Before she accepted him they talked over property matters, and it was agreed that each party was to have the full enjoyment of their respective properties during their lives and to have the right to dispose of the same at death. The third evening before the appointed day the defendant brought to plaintiff a marriage contract to be signed, which she would not sign, asit cut her off from all interest in his property. She sent for Baker twice to come and talk the matter over, but he would not do so, on form an exercise to come and talk the matter over, but he would not do so, and had never been in her house since that evening. In reply to these charges, Baker swore that he was ready and willing to marry her in January, if she had signed the paper. He had ordered his wedding suit and made arrangements about the preacher and license, but when the old woman got mad and called him "old Baker," and made away with her property and refused to sign the agreement, he thought he would let her go, and swore he would never believe in another woman. The jury, with true Southern gallantry, awarded the forsaken Elizabeth $1,000 damages.

visit to an aunt, who was earnestly s licited by her lover to attend him to the hymenial altar, very attentively watched the motions of the wooing pair; and upon his return home, expressed himself to his mother in the following manner: "Mother Mr. S. does love aunt Liddy; he sits by her, he whispers to her, and he hugs her." To whom his mother re-plied: "Why E—, your aunt don't plied: "Why E.—, your aunt don't suffer that, does she? "Suffer it, mother!" replied the child; "la! mother she loves it. You know my little pig, when I scratch him, bow he leans to me? That's the way aunt Liddy does to Mr. S.
